

The King, who wanted to be just, summoned the masons.

When they were before the King they said: “It is not our fault, Your Majesty, but the fault of the brick makers, who made the bricks too small.”

The Monarch, now a little annoyed by the delay, ordered the brick makers to be brought before him. Of course, they said it was the fault of the architect, who gave the orders.